PENNSYLVANIA LEGENDS

Academia Girl's School, Port Royal, PA is the ruins of an 1800s building destroyed by fire. Many legends surround the place, including that a gardener set the fire to cover his tracks after raping and killing many students. Another says the girls at the school all died of a mysterious illness. The ghosts of the students are said to remain on the property, sometimes crying or singing "London Bridge." The apparition of their alleged murderer reportedly sits on a nearby church's steps in all black. Other rumors surrounding the eerie area include a phantom black hound, a force that mysteriously drains car batteries, and a curse on the land.

Emily's Restaurant, Mohnton PA where a young girl is said to haunt this restaurant, which has also gone by the names Martha's Vineyard and the Post Office Inn. It's now called Emily, after the ghost's nickname. Locals will tell you that as far back as they can remember, folks have talked about Emily the ghost. Her playful giggles have been heard in the place for decades.
